I have a theory that most posts I write have this kind of drama. What was once about a recipe or a new product, I am now adding long anecdotes about myself and relationships. I don't usually use a lot of crazy adverbs in my posts, but I am all out here. This is also the first time I have commented on a post in my 3 years of blogging and it is on a post about a recipe I never even posted, but as I like to say in my head I am a self-proclaimed expert. Now, let me back track a little bit and tell you a story. My husband and I love cinnamon rolls, I am not sure why. Maybe it was a long time ago when we were in college. I don't know. But we used to get them every time we ate out. Now the reason we get them is that we can eat them for breakfast and have them for lunch the next day. A few months ago I was in a bad mood and we were at a nice restaurant and we order some cinnamon rolls. I took one bite and I literally threw the rest of the roll away. I was just like "Eww, this is so bad, I can't eat this". Now I am no expert, but I do know the difference between good and bad cinnamon rolls. I am glad I threw it away, because I discovered it had an allergy to my body that had my stomach doing its best to digest it. While I was watching it, I thought to myself, "Wow, so that is what would happen if you had a cinnamon roll that has gluten in it." I have had zero issues with gluten lately. Since I have been trying to minimize gluten I have been having fewer issues with it, but once again, it is just one of those things where you should never have to worry 82157476af
